ISEG - 111 years of a School of Firsts

people and the need for sustained and inclusive socioeconomic development remains to this day as a challenge for the future, as a guide for all those who share this same vision. Allow me to start on a personal note. Manuela Silva was one of the people who most marked my personal and academic life over the past 40 years. She was my professor for the Masters in Economics at ISEG, the supervisor of my Master's thesis, and a co-supervisor (in conjunction with Prof. Tony Atkinson) of my PhD dissertation. I had the privilege of working with her at CISEP, at the CRC, in the Economics and Society group, and in multiple activities at ISEG. Carlos Farinha Rodrigues

Throughout this common journey she provided me with, I learnt a lot from the academic point-of-view and benefited greatly from her resplendent and contagious energy, which was capable of galvanising and mobilising the drive of others, always conferring a social usefulness on all work carried out. However, above all, I learned from her a deeply humanist vision of society and the world, where human activity only earns its true meaning if it translates into a service to the community in which we are inserted, and, in particular, to its most disadvantaged. With the passing of Manuela Silva, I have lost an omnipresent friend, someone who, for both large and small issues, was always an enlightened light on the path to follow and for the ways to
