ISEG’s MiM in the Financial Times: A Milestone and a Responsibility

The inclusion of ISEG’s MiM programme in the Financial Times’ 2026 Masters in Management ranking is, naturally, a source of great satisfaction. Entering directly at 59th place worldwide, amongst a select group of just 100 programmes, is a significant recognition for the MiM, for ISEG and, above all, for our students and alumni.

As the programme’s Coordination team, we see this result not merely as a place in a ranking, but as confirmation of the path we have been forging. A demanding, international Master’s programme, closely linked to the business world and deeply committed to training managers capable of understanding the complexity of the world in which they will work.

Some of the indicators published by the Financial Times are particularly significant. The MiM at ISEG ranks 8th globally for career progression, boasts 100% employability three months after graduation, and receives an overall rating of 8.9 out of 10 from its graduates. More than just figures, these results reflect opportunities, career paths and fulfilled expectations.

It is gratifying to know that our alumni have achieved their salary and career progression goals. But it is also important to understand what sort of managers we are helping to develop. ISEG’s MiM students will soon be making decisions that impact businesses, people and society. They will be making decisions on investment, innovation, technology, talent, sustainability and the use of resources. A high-quality education must necessarily also be a responsible one.

On the MiM programme, we seek to integrate this vision into the academic curriculum. Sustainability, ethics and social responsibility are not optional subjects. They form part of the way we discuss strategy, marketing, finance, operations and data analysis. It therefore comes as no surprise that the Financial Times ranks our programme 17th in the world for teaching ESG and carbon neutrality.

With a significant proportion of international students and at least 30 per cent of domestic students, each cohort of the MiM brings together diverse nationalities, cultures and ways of interpreting problems. This diversity transforms the classroom into a true laboratory for international management and is one of the programme's greatest assets.

Being included in the Financial Times' MiM ranking is a source of pride. But it is not an end in itself. We will continue to work to offer a rigorous, international academic programme that is closely aligned with the realities of business and focused on responsible management.

Ultimately, the true measure of a programme's quality is not its position in a ranking, but the impact its students and alumni are able to make on organisations and society.

ISEG marked the 25th anniversary of PISA with a debate on the evolution of education in Portugal

On 9 September, the National Centre for Educational Research and Innovation (ISEG) hosted the conference ‘PISA, 25 years: what has changed in education?’, bringing together researchers, national and international experts and education officials to analyse the evolution of learning in Portugal and reflect on the challenges facing the education system. The event took place the day after the release of the PISA 2025 results, which show a decline in the performance of Portuguese pupils to levels close to those recorded in 2006 in the three assessed areas — mathematics, reading and science.

Throughout the morning, the new results, the differences between groups of pupils and the role of PISA in the discussion of education policies were analysed, followed in the afternoon by a scientific seminar dedicated to the statistical methods used in these international surveys.

The conference also received media coverage. Nuno Crato commented on the PISA 2025 results and the trend in Portuguese pupils’ performance (read here), whilst Susana Peralta, who moderated one of the round-table discussions at the event, reflected in _Público_ on the results and the main challenges facing education (read here).

ISEG in the Media

>> Nuno Valério, writing about the Bank of Portugal between 1931 and 1974, emphasises that it was “a profitable enterprise” during that period, paying out dividends. These same dividends were a supplementary and regular source of income for a wide range of private investors. (Público)

>> João Duque points out that innovation currently requires levels of capital that the Portuguese do not seem to have available and that the capital market is also unable to provide. (Executive Digest)

>> João Pereira dos Santos explains that the reduction of 8,300 short-let properties in Lisbon since the pandemic has not led to a fall in house prices, although he admits that the restrictions may have helped to slow their rise. (Jornal Económico)

>> Ricardo Ferraz warns that there is little room for manoeuvre for new policies in the 2027 State Budget and that measures with a significant impact on the budget could increase the risk of a deficit. (Notícias ao Minuto)

>> João Tovar Jalles argues that “the State must protect those who were unable to contribute; those who were able to but chose not to contribute fully must accept that this choice has consequences”. (ECO)

>> António Garcia Pereira has once again called for the dissolution of Chega, asking the Public Prosecutor's Office to initiate legal proceedings on the grounds that the party violates the Constitution and exhibits characteristics he describes as racist and fascist. (RTP)

>> Miguel St. Aubyn states that low productivity in Portugal reflects growth that relies too heavily on increased employment and points to obstacles such as bureaucracy, a lack of competition, job insecurity and the housing crisis. (Expresso)

>> Nuno Crato warns that Portugal is falling behind the top-performing countries in PISA and attributes the recent decline to a reversal of education policies previously focused on results, including a reduction in curriculum content and the end of external assessment. (Jornal Económico)

>> Susana Peralta warns of the sharp deterioration in Portugal's results in PISA 2025, which have fallen back to levels seen 20 years ago, calling for a rigorous assessment of education policies before implementing new reforms. (Público)

>> Bernardo Chagas analyses the growing impact of artificial intelligence agents on purchasing decisions, warning of the challenges that this intermediation may pose to the relationship between consumers, brands and retailers, and to customer loyalty itself. (Distribuição Hoje)

Since 2022, the Centre for Research on Gender and Work (ISEG) has been a stakeholder organisation of the International Coalition for Equal Pay (EPIC – Equal Pay International Coalition), representing the academic community.

Established in September 2017, during the 72nd Session of the United Nations General Assembly, EPIC brings together governments, international organisations, business leaders, trade unions, employers' organisations and representatives of civil society. The Coalition is jointly coordinated by the International Labour Organisation (ILO), UN Women and the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD).

EPIC brings together a diverse range of partner organisations committed to reducing the gender pay gap. One of its objectives is to support Member States in achieving the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs), in particular SDG 8, which calls for the application of the principle of equal pay for work of equal value, and SDG 5, which aims to achieve gender equality and empower all women and girls .

As Ireland takes over the Presidency of the Council of the European Union, Dublin hosted the annual EPIC meeting on 17 and 18 September, with the second day coinciding with International Equal Pay Day.

ISEG was represented by Sara Falcão Casaca. It was an opportunity to highlight that equal pay is one of the research topics addressed by the research unit at the Centre for Gender Studies (ISEG), the Centre for Gender, Labour and Power (ISEG Research), which operates the “Gender, Labour and Power” Observatory as part of its Policy Lab, producing regular reports on the subject.

On 24 September at 11.00 am, the public presentation of the Atlas of Social Attitudes will take place in the Maria de Sousa Room at ICS-ULisboa. This is a new digital platform developed by the Institute of Social Sciences at the University of Lisbon (Universidade de Lisboa, ICS-ULisboa), as part of the PASSDA – Production and Archiving of Social Science Data – infrastructure, of which the Portuguese Social Survey (ISEG) is also a part.

The Atlas facilitates the exploration of data from some of the main European comparative social surveys, the implementation of which in Portugal is managed by PASSDA, such as the European Social Survey (ESS) and the European Values Study (EVS), to which will soon be added the Comparative Study of Electoral Systems (CSES).

Through maps, charts and other interactive tools, the platform allows users to compare countries, track changes over time and analyse differences between social groups.

What do Europeans think about politics, immigration, family, work, religion, sustainability or well-being? In what ways do different countries converge or diverge? And how have these attitudes evolved over recent decades?
During the session, the main features of the Atlas will be presented, along with the considerations that underpinned its design and some of the stories that the data enables us to tell.
